Impressions of Insight

The seeker looked at the river again in a different light, Seeing the way of spiritual return as beautiful,
Marked by many twists and turns,
Returning to the Ocean of Love and Mercy.
The river is joined by the clear water of another
As the tutelage of the Mahanta, the Inner Master,
To reveal what has been hidden many lifetimes,
Like the island that hides the far shore.
He sat on the bank, lo many lifetimes, under the sleepy willows, Just observing the sluggish eddies— wondering at it all.
He had returned home but did not know what he sought.
He could not see.
Great sorrow swept over him, Realizing he was able to see what he had been seeking.
Then he looked up and saw the object of his affection, wearing a big smile on his face, And great compassion toward the seeker.
Great joy overwhelmed the seeker
—to see the Master,

Really, truly there, truly real and with joy to welcome him into the beginning of a whole new way of life.

He appeared by the river, which gives life and unfoldment, A purpose of Soul's existence.
This is the real beginning. It never ends.
The Light has penetrated the darkness.

Bryan Lee's contemplation on chapter one of Stranger by the River, by Paul Twitchell.

“Soul is like a cup which has been turned upside down and cannot receive the waters of heaven. The Spiritual Traveler appears and turns the cup face upward so it can be filled, and Soul drenched with the spiritual Sound Current and becomes holy.”—ECK Master Paul Twitchell, Stranger by the River, p.115.
